

David Kuhl, is a Professor in the Department of Family Practice at the University of British Columbia. He graduated with a MHS (U of T) in 1981, a MD (McMaster University) in 1985 and a PhD (UBC) in 1999. In 1996, as a Soros Faculty Scholar, Project on Death in America, he conducted a qualitative study that served as the basis of a book entitled What Dying People Want: Practical Wisdom for the End-of-Life. David's research led to an understanding of iatrogenic suffering and to the founding of the Centre for Practitioner Renewal (CPR). CPR, a centre of service, education, and research, seeks to sustain health care providers in the work place, to understand the effect of living in the presence of suffering, and to repair and restore resilience in health care providers.
